Have you read Lierre Keith's the Vegetarian Myth, in which she explains – among many other very interesting topics – the reasons why we should all STOP eating soy; I was so shocked after having read her chapter on this subject, I immediately stopped my soymilk intake and now use goat's milk in black tea and coffee (otherwise I don't drink milk at all) We now occasionally use fermented soy sauce to add extra flavour to sauces and try and avoid as much as we possibly can processed foods, which I find tough on our two boys.....They are not allergic (as far as I can tell) to anything so we're lucky there and as they grow older, now 15 and 17, they gravitate to healthier foods themselves which I find hugely encouraging.

The large "If" element in Philadelphia this season remains obvious: Do the Eagles have the quarterback who can accurately execute Kelly's strike the throat offense? Will Michael Vick come to terms with the football well enough and make good decisions in the passing game, At the same time staying healthy? Can second year man Nick Foles move sufficiently and show sufficient athleticism to run Kelly's attack? Will rookie Matt Barkley be in the starting mix by the better half of the season, If for no other reason than Philadelphia needs at some point this year to find out if he's the guy moving forward into 2014 and beyond?
